Notice: Valhalla denies rice export ban reports

[P1] The Valhalla trade ministry denies reports that it plans to restrict rice exports.

[P2] No ban, quota or licence requirement is being prepared. Valhalla will continue to export rice to its usual buyers.

[P3] The reports of 14 and 15 December are wrong. They did not come from the ministry or from any official source.

[P4] Valhalla's exportable surplus is small compared with Vanir's. Extra shipments can rise only by about 30 to 35 percent on the current base.

[P5] The ministry is monitoring domestic prices and will act if the local market comes under pressure, but no measure is planned now.

[P6] The denial follows two days of speculation on social media and in a trade blog, which said a ban was being drafted.

[P7] Officials said the ministry had not met exporters to discuss a restriction and had not asked anyone to prepare a notice.

[P8] Valhalla's crop is smaller than Vanir's, and most of it is sold under annual contracts rather than on the spot market.

[P9] The ministry will publish a short statement if the domestic price position changes.

[P10] Signed: Ingrid Stahl, trade official, Valhalla.
